

Reading Hospital School of Health Sciences
Nursing Program
Level Objectives/
End of Program Student Learning Outcomes

Year One (General Education Courses)	Year Two (100 Level Nursing Courses)	Year Three (200 Level Nursing Courses) (End of Program Student Learning Outcomes)
At the completion of Year One the student will be able to:	At the completion of Year Two the student will be able to:	At the completion of Year Three the student will be able to:
Demonstrate comprehension of basic biological and behavioral sciences as a foundation for understanding the relationship to individual health.	Combine principles from nursing, physical, biological, and behavioral sciences to meet the needs of individuals.	Integrate principles from nursing, physical, biological, and behavioral sciences to provide comprehensive healthcare for individuals.
Display the ability to think critically, theoretically, and analytically.	Utilize critical thinking skills when using the nursing process in meeting the holistic needs of individuals.	Incorporate critical thinking skills when using the nursing process in the delivery of comprehensive holistic nursing care for individuals.
	Utilize teaching/learning principles in educating individuals and significant others to maintain or attain their optimal level of health on the continuum.	Synthesize teaching/learning principles in the development, design, implementation of a teaching plan for individuals and significant others in response to their ever-changing needs on the health continuum.
Understand the basic theories, models and practices of verbal and written communication.	Apply the principles of communication effectively when interacting with the patient, significant others, and the interprofessional healthcare team.	Utilize therapeutic communication techniques in interactions with the patient, significant others, the interprofessional healthcare team, groups and the community.
Exhibit the ability to collaborate effectively.	Function as a member of the interprofessional healthcare team in meeting the needs of individuals and significant others.	Establish a collaborative relationship with members of the interprofessional healthcare team in the provision of comprehensive healthcare to individuals or groups.
Explain concepts and theories in social sciences and psychology as they relate to the needs of individuals and health.	Recognize the impact of community aspects on the health of individuals.	Incorporate community aspects in the provision of holistic healthcare for individuals and groups.
Demonstrate the application of social and psychological concepts in everyday life.	Describe the social, political, technological and economic trends that impact on nursing and the healthcare system.	Analyze the social, political, technological and economic trends that impact on nursing and the healthcare system.
Understand the basic principles in ethics and the universal principles of health care.	Demonstrate a value system based on ethical and legal implications when practicing nursing in the healthcare system.	Integrate a value system based on ethical and legal implications into the profession of nursing and healthcare.